11 June 2008 With the recent release of Design Phase 1 in Dauntless (and the regular blog updating) I've started to rediscover the game a bit. There are quite a few fans out there that are rather concerned about the lack of updates since the last thing. I know there are quite a few blog posts there as well, but I guess my pages don't get as many views as the game's page does. Some more thoughts I had while playing the game: Obscure terms are a bitch! We're given a menu of options with no info at all on what they do (and isn't it annoying when you press a key and there is no info on the key whatsoever?). And clicking on "Configuration" should then let you select what you want to change (unless you need to press Esc when you're in the config screen). Okay, that's the menu stuff over. There is quite an odd method of leveling up your thief. You have to get hit by four things in a single turn so you can level up. So as far as I can tell it's just - walking - that can level you. There is no crafting of anything, no gathering. I'm sure there are ways of crafting an item such that a single attack is what does the trick, but I didn't figure it out, so I haven't tried to play a single turn against 4 enemies. Death does NOT mean you have to lose items. There is no point the you remove an item from your inventory. Just like with any real RPG, a killer's gold rewards are "lost forever" until you leave the city and come back. There is no storage available to keep your stuff. There is a progression of outfits, which will cost you gold but only add a single more to your stats. There is no permanent damage done that stops progression (though it is limited to a certain number of outfits). At some point you have to select a job. You are given many choices, but once you do this, you can only switch jobs, not go back and pick another path. Oh yes, and the "start over" option is greyed out until you pick a job
